JNU SPECTACLE

Protests by a section of students from the Jawaharlal Nehru University are now getting a bit tedious. Despite support from fanatical former students and some media outlets, the protests have no support from the public at large, unlike the protests after the horrific gang-rape of December 26, 2012. Indeed, when members of the public questioned why they were being inconvenienced, it appears some protestors threatened them with violence defeating the purpose. The riot-like situation witnessed in the capital on Friday as hundreds of misguided students tried to lay siege to the city was rightly stopped by the police. There is, however, little doubt that both sides indulged in violence, the police clearly misbehaved with a photo-journalist and the students, despite trying to whitewash their violent streak, did attack a senior police officer, leaving him with injuries. Student politics remains vibrant in India despite claims by some Communist leaning student bodies. But one reason the protests by the JNU students has whittled away public sympathy is because the public at large feels that it is more of the same old, same old. There is no sympathy among the public for the anti-attendance protests which is where the current protests germinated. In fact, the taxpayer on the whole is disgusted that those who enjoy subsidised education are protesting what some would consider quite normal and attendance norms apply at many other Central and private universities. There is a feeling that the sense of entitlement that students have gone overboard.

That said, the students were also protesting police inaction against a professor accused of sexual harassment. On that front, the students are justified in raising that issue in the public domain. There is no excuse for sexual harassment in academia and this is a problem that has been going on for far too long. There is a feeling by some that sexual harassment charges tend to be a one-way street with some notable Left-leaning academics getting away, but it appears that even that is changing. If students have felt uncomfortable, they must report this to the authorities and action should be taken against offenders. However, accusations are one thing, there must not constitute the judgement and must be substantiated. However, accusers must be made to feel that justice is being done and not resort to senseless protests which if they are politicised tend to alienate support. The reason the protests of after the December 2012 gangrape were popular was because a large section of society supported it. However, JNU students are increasingly being seen as protesting for the sake of protesting. That is bad optics, and matters are made worse by the the seeming violence at the protests.

Students have the right to protest and must protest but they also have to take people along with them if the protests are to lead to meaningful change. Disrupting public life is not the way to go about protests in the current environment.

Status & Changing Roles of Women in Indian Society (85)

Empowering women is thus clearly a basic human rights issue. It is also an issue linked closely to reducing poverty. About 70% of people living in poverty are women, most of them in rural areas. While representing a large share of the agricultural workforce, women farmers benefit from only 5% of agricultural extension services.

Empowerment of women has been one of the strongest drivers of social evolution over the past century and is acknowledged as essential for addressing the global challenges facing humanity. Working women, both educated and uneducated, are denied equality and justice in their homes as well as in their work places. A working woman who is also a mother, is expected not only to do her office work, but also all the household work, both in the morning and in the evening.

Violence against women is the largest war today, as measured by death and casualties per year. Although 125 countries have laws that penalize domestic violence, up to 70% of women continue to be targeted for physical and/or sexual violence in their lifetime, and 603 million women live in countries where domestic violence is still not a crime.

Inequalities between men and women manifest themselves in all areas of development. Inequalities are obvious in:

- Human development - health and education
- Economic development
- Violence against women
- Participation in public life and policymaking
- Social attitudes and gender stereotyping

Although many people respect women, women believe that they have been treated unfairly in the past. India is ranked among the worst countries in crime. It has especially high rates in all forms of sexual exploitation. Women face sexual harassment everywhere, in the street harassment rates of Indian women is also an upsetting part of Indian reality, homes, in street in public transports and even at the workplace. Sometimes Delhi is called as the rape capital. The most terrible part of Indian reality is that most sexual harassment cases remain not reported as the victims think it will put their name to shame. According to statistics, only 20% of those cases are reported. The statistics also comes to prove that in every 10 rape cases, 6 are girls under 18.

Meteoric rise of omnipotent Xi Jinping

Chinese President Xi Jinping has formally amended the country's Constitution to continue in office as long as he wants. His audacious decision is on the expected lines. It was only a matter of time that he had to announce the move through the country's rubber stamp Parliament known as 'National People's Congress (NPC)'. It brings Xi in the league of legendary Chairman Mao Zedong, the first President of China who ruled until his death in 1976.

How the historic constitutional amendment, which has finally set Xi to stay on power for an indefinite period, has come to reality is worth a close study. The two-term limit i.e. 10 years continuously in office was introduced in 1982. And this March 11, the amendment gave unprecedented power to Xi. The NPC approved the change in the norms on a vote of 2,958 to 2. It hardly gave any time to the Opposition that could have come from some quarters of the CPC. Now, Xi can retain his post as long as he wants after his second five-year term comes to an end in 2023. The process by which the amendment came was really unusual. In fact, Xi had started the process in last September when he revealed his plans to change the Constitution at a meeting of the party's powerful Politburo. He even launched a working group to discuss the changes. But ironically this group did not come around until November to make the possible changes, less than six months before the revisions were to take place.

However, what made Xi move ahead is the way he packed the party's top leadership positions with his supporters last year. This all happened in the National Congress convened in October 2017. This has eliminated all major roadblocks to amendments to the Constitution. A draft of the amendment was unveiled in mid-January and came up for full support from the NPC's standing committee by the end of the month. However, Xi and his team were too smart not to reveal the proposed abolition term limit until February 25, just eight days before the annual deliberation session was to begin in Beijing.

Records show that Xi has offered no chance for any dialogue and discussion, unlike the way it used to be in the past whenever any constitutional amendment came in. When the Chinese Constitution of 1982 was amended twice in 1999 and 2004, the concerned working groups were laying down the foundations for almost a year or so. Generally, even ordinary changes to any legislation were covered at least by three rounds of the NPC standing committees before final approval.

Though Xi has tight grip over the party unlike any other heads in the recent past, certain elements within the party have strong reservations about the abolition of the presidential term limits. However, it was an open secret that once Xi has decided, all within the party know that no one can stop him from doing what he wants. He has conducted massive raids against those who opposed him in the past, coming from both China's military and the party's Youth League.

Around the same time, the People's Daily, a party-controlled newspaper, regularly played down the scrapping of the two-term limit by saying that abolishing term limits "does not mean life time rule". The other Chinese State media also gave extensive coverage of the sessions without mentioning any criticism on any issues. The Chinese Radio International praised the fact that the 'long-awaited revamping of State institutions' will be high on the NPC agenda. This all shows that Xi has worked underneath very hard, and, particularly, kept all his detractors at bay on way to amending the Constitution. The way Xi has prepared for these sweeping changes "for a powerful state and for the benefit of the people of China" demonstrates his ingenuity to manoeuvre his way into a position of strength in the party.

This year the NPC was a gathering of 2,980 deputies, who represented China's provinces, autonomous regions, centrally administered municipalities, the special administrative regions of Hong Kong, Macau and the Armed Forces.

The NPC's resolution to pave the way for Xi's supreme hold on power has simply indicated the prevalence of what is known as 'Xi Jinping Thought' in the party. Besides, this NPC session was very important as this year China will complete 40 years of its reform and opening up policy. Apart from Xi's extension of term, other two areas of focus were corruption and protection of environment. Structural reform proposals will be unveiled which may include creating a national anti-graft supervisory board that would target all public officials. The media houses in Hong Kong has already speculated that supervisory authorities for China's banking, securities and insurance sectors will be reshuffled soon. Also the bodies overseeing these sectors in Hong Kong, Macau and Taiwan will be integrated at the earliest. Alongside all these political board games, what would come to the fore is that the GDP growth target is likely to be kept at 6.5 per cent. With Xi calling for growth, which highlights quality over quantity, environment protection will take the centre stage at the NPC.

Let's have a look at how the Chinese people have reacted to Xi's decisions both within and outside the country. First of all, the young overseas Chinese students in America demonstrated their dissent against Xi's power grab. The posters saying 'Not My President' first appeared on March 1 at University of California, San Diego. Some days later, this campaign spread to Columbia University and New York University and finally to some nine other colleges across the US, Canada, the UK and Australia.

This all happened only when the CPC proposed to scrap the presidential term limits. Much before the formal announcement of the extension of power, a silent protest movement started in some countries and among the young people. They represent that generation who has never seen and experienced the might of Chairman Mao and his long arm of power.

Why we must remember Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel ?

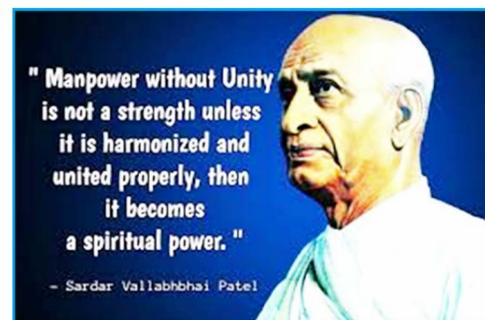

Vinod Chandrashekar Dixit
Freelance Journalist
Ahmedabad

Your report "Sardar Patel was an embodiment of Indian culture" published in your FP Gujarat dated 20th March 2018 reminded me the memorable lines of H.W. Longfellow that - "Lives of great men all remind us, we can make our lives sublime, And, departing, leave behind endeavor of nation building. The genuine qualities of leadership he had shown as leader of Satyagraha, flowered in greater way in the administration of the country, maintenance of law and order and ensuring stability of the country and making it invulnerable.

Here, I would like to point out that if our country is such a well built & multifarious, then one can carefully guess that Sardar Patel is the chief engineer for it. He emerged an astute leader and a perceptive statesman acknowledged as the 'Iron Man' and a founder of modern India. As a nation-builder, he was a key leader in the framing of the Constitution, consolidated the nascent state by integrating the Princely states and reorganising the bureaucracy.

lute fearlessness integrated 553 princely Indian States into the Indian Union. Due to the achievement of this massive task, Sardar Patel got the title of 'Iron Man'. He is one of the prestigious leaders of the world who became immortal by uniting a scattered nation without any bloodshed. He took over as the nascent nation's Home Minister at a very crucial juncture in history and devoted himself whole heartedly to ensure that the country which was already partitioned remained intact and united.

As soon as he came in contact with the Mahatma he decided to discard his foreign clothes and follow the rules of Satyagraha as laid down by Gandhiji. He showed a genuine interest in the welfare of his companions, by constantly enquiring about their needs and problems and helping them as best he could.

I would like to quote one incident of Gujarat. When Hindus and Muslims rioted in Ahmedabad in 1941, Patel was in jail. On his release from jail he told Gujaratis that on his release: "The wounds that were inflicted on me, deep down within me, when I heard of what took place during the riots in this city, have still not healed. If even 10 had been bold enough to stand up to the miscreants, this would not have happened. In future, do not ever run away. Put up the defence. Face your enemy with a superior force: Gandhiji's path of non-violence."

Today, when we remember this great leader, I would like to quote his 5 top quotes that he dedicated to India and inspired us a lot.

- It is the prime responsibility of every citizen to feel that his country is free and to defend its freedom is his duty.
- My only desire is that India should be a good producer and no one should be hungry, shedding tears for food in the country.

• Even if we lose the wealth of thousands, and our life is sacrificed, we should keep smiling and be cheerful keeping our faith in God and Truth.

• Manpower without Unity is not a strength unless it is harmonized and united properly, then it becomes a spiritual power.

• Every citizen of India must remember that he is an Indian and he has every right in this country but with certain duties.

Today, even after 68 years of independence, our country frantically needs a leader like Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, who was not just an inspiration but was also a hope for our country. It is crystal clear that a person who has high moral standards is bound to take decisions, which are also in the public interest. As it is rightly said in Bhagwad Geeta that this mortal frame is perishable but the spirit within it is never dead so when we say that Sardar Patel was dead in 1950, we simply mean that he was physically dead but he is spiritually alive and his spirit must not be dead. With the statement of our PM Shri Narendra Modi, I would conclude that "Through his skill, vision and patriotism Sardar Patel integrated the nation. We can never forget his contribution in uniting free India." It is hard to find a leader like him who dedicated himself to the service of the nation and its people. Let us hope we find a determined leader like him with depth and vision. Following up the footsteps of Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel to inculcate integrity in Public life, let us remember him with veneration and bow to him. Let us imitate his admirable qualities.

us, Footprints in the sands of time."

Today, Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel is a historical figure who moves us to tears but it seems India has forgotten this precious stone because today's young generation of India only knows him as a freedom fighter. The younger generation has little understanding of the Sardar's monumental contribution in stitching together a united India from disparate princely States. Though Sardar Patel's contribution in bringing the nation together was great, his memories are fading away gradually and thus he has become a silent icon.

Sardar Patel was a great political leader with exemplary qualities. Straightforward and outspoken, his commitment to secular India was true and well-defined. Blessed with extraordinary qualities of courage, integrity and an iron determination, Patel played an important role in the freedom movement. He was, thus, able to win their unstinted support in the

His efforts to change the Hindu religion and protect the people of other faiths reflected his longing for the right to religion. He was a person of independent nature who brought together the farmers and encouraged them and hence got the title of 'Sardar'.

The British government considered him as a threat and his lectures were considered anti-government and he was imprisoned several times. In 1942, he took part in the Quit India Movement under the leadership of Mahatma Gandhi.

With great wisdom and political foresight, he strengthened the small kingdoms. There were a lot of problems connected with the reunion of the copious states into India. The impact of Gandhiji's personality on Patel was tremendous which gave him a new mission in life.

Sardar Patel's unrelenting efforts towards the unity of the country brought success. A man of iron will and abso-

Ayyaz Ahmed to play a bad boy in &TV's Agnifera

&TV's fiction drama, Agnifera has managed to hold the audience attention with its complicated love story. Now after Vishu's (Mohak Khurrana) death, the channel has roped in the super dashing Ayyaz Ahmed opposite Shrishti (played by Simran Kaur) to further heighten the drama in the household.

Ayyaz Ahmed who was last seen as Dhairyaa in Santosh Maa will be essaying a completely contrasting character in Agnifera. He plays the role of a badass Bajju Bhaiya, a fiery, egoistic gunda (thug) from Kanpur. He will be seen at logger heads with Shrishti who detests him for being an outlaw.

Confirming the news, Ayyaz Ahmed said, "It is something new from what I have played onscreen in the past. I am really excited about it, this is my second show with &TV and I am glad that they found me suitable to play Bajju. I am working on the performance design of the character as it requires to talk with a certain accent and also creating a unique body language of a gunda. So yes, I am looking forward to start shooting." (19-8)
